

Want to be more marketable?

Add a RUSSIAN MAJOR or a RUSIAN MINOR.

In challenging times like these, your best career strategy is your continuous improvement. What better way to show professional growth and enhanced skills than learning Russian.

Today, graduates, who major or minor in Russian, have the opportunity to use their language and culture skills in a broad variety of settings in both Russia and the United States.

Students go on to work in business as financial and policy analysts for American and Russian companies. They work for non-governmental organizations, for publishing houses, for the print and broadcast media. They teach in Russian schools, and consult in fields such as marketing, advertising, aerospace, and computer engineering. And, course, some continue to go on to do more traditional work as teachers in universities and schools, as employees of the United States government.

The CIA, the FBI, The United States State Department, The Department of Justice, and the NSA are some of the agencies that employ Russian language majors and minors. Also one can check out USA Jobs, run by the Office of Personnel Management, for other employment opportunities
