

HIST 303: Food in Modern America

This course examines the kitchen as an architectural space, a place of labor and food production, and an arena for technological innovation in modern American history. Cooking and eating reflect cultural sentiments about modernity, progress, ethnicity, and family, and the politics of how society nourishes bodies.

Fall 2020 T/Th 10:30-11:45am UNIV 217
(crosslist with AMST 301)

Science, Technology & Society, & Humanities Core Requirements
Professor Sharra Vostral, svostral@purdue.edu