REL450: Christian Ethics
Spring 2016, TTh 3:00-4:15, REC103, Dr. Ashley Purpura

This course offers students the opportunity to study the sources, issues, and theologies of Christian ethics within a variety of diverse historical and denominational contexts. It includes a study of biblical, patristic, medieval, modern, and contemporary understandings and challenges of Christian morality. Diverse Christian responses to ethical dilemmas will be discussed and debated in class to encourage students to develop their own informed perspectives. Students will have the opportunity to explore their own interests through self-designed course projects and optional service learning. Counts towards the Religious Studies major/minor. All students are welcome without prerequisite!
